Says Nazi Effort Troubles Costa Rica

Anti-Semitic agitation and attempted bombings in Costa Rica during the past six months have been the work of a small underground group which is attempting to poison the minds of the population, Dr. Maurice L. Perlzweig, political consultant to the World Jewish Congress, declared in New York upon his return from a five-day tour of inspection to that country. Despite the agitation and sporadic violence perpetrated by the small anti-Semitic group, which appears to have unlimited funds and is alleged to be receiving support from Nazi elements, he said, the Costa Rican population is overwhelmingly democratic in approach and friendly to minority groups, and the government is determined to prevent any invasion of the rights of citizens, Jewish or otherwise.

Reporting on conferences with Costa Rican President Otilio Ulate, Foreign Minister Fernando Lara, and other government officials, as well as with leaders of the Jewish community of some 1,200 persons, Dr. Perlzweig reported that the Congress of Costa Rica adopted a resolution calling for an investigation of the leadership and financial resources of the Junta Patriotica Costarricense, a group which has placed virulent anti-Semitic advertisements in the Costa Rican press. "The President assured me," Dr. Perlzweig said, "that the police were on the track of the malefactors and expressed the hope that they would shortly be identified and brought to trial. He spoke with the utmost bitterness of the damage done to the good name of Costa Rica abroad by these people, and I have every confidence that all [illegible] democratic principles."

Dr. Perlzweig cited as "of the first importance" a declaration published by the Chamber of Commerce of San Jose (capital city of Costa Rica), which consists of the leading merchants of that city, condemning violence and anti-Jewish agitation in the strongest terms. The declaration was extremely significant as an expression of public opinion, because its authors [illegible] in Costa Rica, and have first-hand knowledge of Jewish commercial activity. Dr. Perlzweig asserted that the Jewish community of Costa Rica "can compare favorably in its high civic and human standards with any comparable community anywhere in the world. It discharges every civic duty which is open to it with enthusiasm, and it renders a service of outstanding economic importance to the country

Woman Led In Parent And Child Work

Mrs. Rose Alderblum Cahan, of 395 Riverside Drive, New York, a former leader in parent and child education who received most of her education after she was fifty and her children were grown, died of a heart attack in Mount Sinai Hospital. Her age was 68. Mrs. Cahan was supervisor of the Works Projects Administration nursery schools in New York and a pioneer in the system of bringing parents into the classrooms. Her theory was that the schools and the parents could learn from each other.

Although she had not had a high school education, Mrs. Cahan received a Master of Arts degree at Teachers College, Columbia University, in 1927. She had received a Bachelor of Science degree there in 1931, despite her promise to the authorities at her matriculation ten years before that she would not apply for a degree because of her lack of educational prerequisites, says the New York Times.

Mrs. Cahan came to America from Austria, where she was born. The eldest in a family of six, she worked in factories to aid the younger members in receiving an education. Her early nursery school experience was at the Hillside Nursery School, which served a large private housing project in the Bronx and was used later as a pilot institution for the Federal nursery program.

Mrs. Cahan was a member of the Society for the Advancement of Judaism. She is survived by her husband, Solomon Cahan, a retired manufacturer and former owner of the Automatic Steel Products Company; a son, Dr. Alvin Cahan, and a daughter, Mrs. Joseph Michaels.

Was Known As Leader In Labor

Joseph Baskin of 2701 Grand Concourse, The Bronx, New York, general secretary since 1916 of the Workmen's Circle, national Jewish labor fraternal organization, and editor of its organ, The Friend, died in Beth Israel Hospital after a long illness. His age was 71.

Born in the one-street town of Biala, Minsk, Russia, a son of Nachim Mendel and Rose Baskin, he studied in yeshivas (Hebrew schools) in Dolhinov, Ilye and Huta. He earned money by coaching backward students at the Dolhinov yeshiva, and at the age of 12 became a private tutor. He also did farm work and picked mushrooms to save money for his education.

Mr. Baskin went to Vilna, Lithuania, for higher Talmudic learning. At the age of 16, his interest turned from Talmudic to general studies and to socialism.

He became active in the General Union of Jewish Workers, known as The Bund, in Lithuania, Poland and Russia, and engaged in cultural activities among workers, beginning with women cigarette makers, to whom he lectured at secret, illegal meetings, says the New York Times.

In 1889, Mr. Baskin went to Geneva, Switzerland, where on a Baron de Hirsch scholarship, he attended the College de Geneve. Upon his graduation in 1900, he studied electrical engineering at the Universities of Lausanne and Nancy, France. Mr. Baskin was graduated as an electrical engineer in 1905.

Having continued his work for The Bund, when he returned in 1905 to Vilna, then part of the Russian Czarist empire, he took part in strikes and anti-Government demonstrations. He organized and became publisher of The [illegible]

In 1907 the authorities stopped the paper and arrested several members of the editorial staff. Mr. Baskin, after arranging for the sale of the press, fled to the United States, arriving in New York on Thanksgiving Day. After working at an automobile factory in Cleveland, Ohio, he took a position in his profession at the Westinghouse electric plant in East Pittsburgh, where he remained from 1908 to 1913 and was active in the Workmen's Circle and the Socialist movement.

In 1914, Mr. Baskin was called to the general office of the Workmen's Circle, where he accepted the position of assistant general secretary. Two years later he was named general secretary.

In this capacity, he led a victorious fight against an attempt by leftist elements to capture control of the organization. During his administration, the educational, medical and social service departments were organized, as well as the home for the aged; elementary and intermediate Yiddish schools; summer camps; youth and women's branches, and English-speaking groups.

Mr. Baskin began a column, "Odds and Ends" in The Friend in 1915. He wrote editorials in 1922 and became editor of the paper in 1924. He contributed frequently to The Jewish Daily Forward, the Worker and other Socialist and labor publications.

Active in the ORT, he worked also for the Hebrew Immigration Aid Society, the labor division of the New York Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, the Jewish Socialist Verband, the Jewish Labor Committee, Deborah Sanatorium and the Red Cross. In 1945, he was a Jewish labor consultant at the San Francisco Conference of

Urges Jewish Group To Establish Unified Structure Of Diverse Viewpoints

The establishment of "organic Jewish communities" to serve the spiritual, cultural and social needs of American Jews was urged at Cleveland, Ohio, in a paper submitted to leaders of the Conservative branch of Judaism attending the fifty-second annual convention of the Rabbinical Assembly of America.

The paper was prepared by the Assembly's Committee on Jewish Unity in America, headed by Rabbi Ira Eisenstein, leader of the Society for the Advancement of Judaism in New York City. It held that the organic community would be a unified structure, "based on voluntary association, composed of all the diverse Jewish viewpoints and interests."

Rabbi Eisenstein emphasized that the organic community "would not establish an enclave, a separate body within the American community, but on the contrary it would be based on the thesis that Jews must learn to live in two cultures, the American and the Jewish, in such a way that they would interact and fructify each other."

In an analysis of the proposed project, Rabbi Eisenstein, vice president of the assembly, asserted that the organic communities would be designed to "satisfy the needs for fellowship, common tradition, education, ethical guidance, religious orientation and security." Of these, he said, "Jewish religion and culture would be given priority."

The paper recommended the establishment of several "pilot plants" in a few American Jewish communities that would be under the direction of a national committee, composed of leaders of lay and religious organizations, says the New York Times.

The concept of the organic Jewish [illegible] was supported by Dr. [illegible] Kaplan, Professor of Philosophies of Religion at the Jewish Theological Seminary in New York, the institution devoted to the training of Conservative rabbis.

In essence, the assembly's committee endorsed Dr. Kaplan's basic approach. One of the major principles, as outlined by Dr. Kaplan and underscored by the assembly's committee, calls for the broadening of the "concept of religion so as to enable the Jewish people to designate itself as a religious community."

Prominent Jewish religious and lay leaders, took part in discussion following the presentation of the paper. Philip Bernstein, associate director of the Council of Jewish Federations and Welfare Funds, held that any effective program of Jewish unity "must begin with the people themselves, where they live and associate, in the local communities." He maintained that "unity must grow from the ground up—it cannot be imposed from the top down."

"We," Mr. Bernstein asserted, "are speaking of unity without uniformity. Diversity of approaches and the clash of ideas is essential to the vitality of Jewish life."

Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, leader of Cleveland's Euclid Avenue Temple, a Reform congregation, held that major emphasis should be placed upon the ideological factors of faith in any plan leading toward unification. He said that America was more hospitable "to religious diversity than to ethnic separatism."

Rabbi Max D. Davidson, of Perth Amboy, N. J., president of the Rabbinical Assembly of America asserted that American Jews had a twofold task, to advance the cause of freedom, with particular emphasis on democratic ideals and principles, and "to assure a creative future for their millenial tradition."

His presidential address opened the four-day fifty-second annual convention of the assembly, which is composed of the leaders of the Conservative branch of Judaism in the U.S. and Canada and includes chaplains in the armed forces. The great majority of the rabbis are graduates of the Jewish Theological Seminary of America, of which Dr. Louis Finkelstein is chancellor.

In stressing that throughout the centuries Jews had had too many "tragic experiences with tyranny not to know how to cherish our liberties," Rabbi Davidson held that Jews who knew their history and faith "must inevitably be fighters in the defense of basic human rights."

At the same time, he said Communism "is not only our ideological foe, it is as much a threat to our existence as Nazism."

Pointing to the nation's strong adherence to the principle of separation of church and state, he declared that the American way of life "offers a unique opportunity for the development of a free, creative religious life." He added:

"Never before have we Jews lived under conditions so favorable to the expression of the untrammeled conscience. With the separation of church and state, with excellent opportunities, there is no reason why American Jews cannot produce a type of Judaism which, in its way, may rival the great traditions of Babylonia, Spain and Eastern Europe."

Turning to the subject of Israel, Rabbi Davidson asserted that the fledgling state "will undoubtedly produce its own unique cultural and religious life; the land itself, with its historic associations, and the ingathered exiles with their rich diversity, will certainly make a contribution to religion and democracy. But we must not overlook the salient fact that Jewish communities in the past have been major factors in moulding Jewish life and thought, and the American Jewish community, young and vigorous, now stands at the threshold of its career."

Pointing out that in 1954 American Jews will observe the 300th anniversary of the settlement of the first Jewish families in America he asserted that "American Jewry has only recently come of age in scholarship, in the development of institutions and in the assumption of world-wide responsibilities."

Rabbi Davidson said that he saw "almost everywhere a decision that religion and the religious emphasis alone can chart the future. What American Jews may achieve can be achieved only with the unique [illegible]

He asserted that "security of tenure of the rabbi and security for his sustenance in later years are indispensable to the future of American Jewish life." He urged the assembly to work with other clerical groups to have the clergy included in the Social Security Act.

Rabbi Wolfe Kelman, executive secretary of the assembly, said that the new Jewish communities in suburban or urban housing developments were turning first to the Rabbinical Assembly Placement Commission for leaders.

The Rabbinical Assembly of America unanimously went on record in asserting that the "greatest threat facing our democracy is from within in suppressing honest criticism of ideas and institutions."

The delegates adopted a series of resolutions including one that voiced strong opposition to "assaults on academic freedom as are manifest in vigilante attacks on teachers, boards of education, texts and even students."

The convention also called upon the major political parties to "give substance" to our democratic concepts by "including in the forthcoming platforms specific recommendations to guarantee the civil rights and liberties of all our citizens."

The rabbis urged the political parties to pledge their support of legislation "to implement the program of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, including recommendations assuring equality of opportunity in public housing, health and education."

The assembly's social action committee, headed by Rabbi Morris N. Kertzer of Rockville Center, L. I., submitted a paper to the delegates that also called [illegible]

URGES JEWISH

"The role of the synagogue and church is these times [redacted] able a moral yardstick by which to judge all our candidates for political office.

"We who speak in the name of religion have a bounden duty to be wary of politicians who glibly speak in the name of religion because they feel that it is politically expedient to mention the divine name in the first and last paragraphy of every speech."

In discussion on "Jewish Unity in America," three diverse viewpoints were presented by Dr. David Petegorsky, executive director of the American Jewish Congress; Milton Himmelfarb of the American Jewish Committee, and Rabbi Simon G. Kramer, Orthodox leader of the Hebrew Institute of University Heights, New York.

Dr. Petegorsky held that the "major problem in American Jewish life is not unity, but democracy." Mr. Himmelfarb noted that the American Jewish community had been "fortunate in not having a rigid hierarchial order whose ukase must be ceded and obeyed." Rabbi Kramer observed that the basic unity of American Jews must stem from its religious character.

Abba S. Eban, Israel's Ambassador to the United States, asserted that Jews throughout the world, "faithful to their proper political allegiance, cannot evade the central fact that Israel is the country in which the qualities and attributes of the Jewish mind are expressed in political and social institutions."

Rabbi Ira Eisenstein, leader of the Society for the Advancement of Judaism, in New York, was elected president of the Rabbinical Assembly of America, national organization of Conservative rabbis, at the fifty-second annual convention in Cleveland, at the Park Synagogue.

Rabbi Eisenstein was graduated from Columbia University in 1927 with a B. A. degree and in 1941 received his Ph. D. from that university. He was graduated from the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in 1931. He was [redacted] for the Advancement of Judaism in 1950, and became leader in 1945.

Rabbi Eisenstein is associate chairman of the editorial board of "The Reconstructionist" and the author of several volumes on Judaism.

Y.; Lazare Moses, Yeasel Moses, and Altar Moses, all of Buffalo, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Goldberg and son, Charles, of Sicklerville, N. J.; and Miss Doris Rotko, of Philadelphia, Pa., were wedding guests.

SILVERSTEIN-PERVIN

The marriage of Shirley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Pervin, Pine Avenue East, to Marven Silverstein, son of Mrs. Dora Silverstein, Esplanade Avenue, and the late Joseph Silverstein, took place, at half-past six o'clock, on June 1, at Chevra Kadisha Synagogue, Rabbi David Lieff, Reverend A. Kenner, and Cantor I. Tyberg officiating. The bride was given in marriage by her father. Her floor-length princess gown of white Chantilly lace, satin, and net, had a Peter Pan collar, with long sleeves, pointed over the hands, and a full skirt ending in a satin, lace, and net train. Her fingertip veil of nylon tulle was draped to a headdress of mother-of-pearl beading on stiff pleated net, and she carried a prayer book covered with two white orchids and streamers of lilies-of-the-valley. Miss Frances Silverstein, sister of the groom, as maid of honour, wore a strapless gown of apple-green net, having a very full skirt and a matching stole; also a picture hat of matching net, and carried a nosegay of Talisman roses. George Pervin, uncle of the bride, was best man. The ushers were: Sidney Silverstein, brother of the groom; Alvin Steinberg, Eddy Greenspan, cousins of the bride; Sidney Wingrad, Saul Pinchuk, Charles Rotchin, Max Dankner, and Max Mendelson. The canopy was decorated with gladioli, peonies, and baskets of other flowers; and the aisle with similar flowers and white ribbon. "Because" was sung. There was an orchestra. A reception took place in the synagogue hall, where standards of flowers and potted ferns made a background for the receiving line. Mrs. Pervin wore a navy-blue nylon lace gown, made with a square neckline, and long sleeves, coming to points over the hands. She had a navy-blue beaded hat and handbag to match, and a corsage of pink and blue carnations. Mrs. Silverstein was in a cinnamon-coloured lace gown, in tunic effect, a high, stand-up collar, and a very full skirt. She had a matching hat and handbag, and her corsage was of pink roses. The bride and groom left by plane for a wedding trip to New York, the former wearing a navy-blue gabardine suit, with a white nylon blouse, white pique hat, with veil, white nylon gloves, navy-blue suede shoes and handbag, and an orchid corsage. The couple are living on Barclay Avenue. Mr. and Mrs. H. Hirschhorn and daughter, Joan, brother-in-law, sister, and niece of the groom, of Bayside, Long Island, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. H. Gluck and daughter, Alva, uncle, aunt, and cousin of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. I. Abrams, cousins of the groom, all of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. M. Garbell, uncle and aunt of the groom, of West Hartford, Conn.; Mrs. N. Kates, aunt of the groom, of Toronto, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. L. Greenspoon and son, Albert, uncle, aunt, and cousin of the bride; and H. Lechter, all of Newark, N. J.; and Mr. and Mrs. J. Greenspoon, uncle and aunt of the bride, of Bronx, N. Y., were wedding guests.

SACKS-SCOPP

The marriage of Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Zalman Scopp, 1617 Ducharme Avenue, to Jerome Martin Sacks, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sacks, 5277 de Vimy Avenue, took place on June 8, at five o'clock, at Adath Israel Synagogue, with Rabbi Charles Bender officiating, assisted by Rev. M. Mandelcorn and Cantor Eugene Goldberger. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white floor-length sleeveless gown of layered net over satin. It had a yoke of net, bordered with wide lace, which was embroidered in silver thread, and formed front panels on the skirt, and a fitted bodice, having buttons down the back. The skirt was full, ending in a slight train. She had gauntlets of net, with cuffs of silver lace, and her shoulder-length veil of tulle illusion was held by a cap of lace to match the gown. She carried a cascade bouquet of white orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. R. Lutterman, sister of the bride, was matron of honour, in a ballerina-length gown of ice-blue net, over taffeta. The strapless bodice was of pleated net, and the full skirt had appliqued bows of taffeta, outlined in seed-pearl beading. Her headdress was of ice-blue taffeta and net, embroidered in seed-pearl beading, and she had a cascade bouquet of crimson Sweetheart roses. She had a string of pearls, a gift of the groom. Herbert A. Sacks, brother of the groom, was best man. The ushers were: Alfred and Jack Scopp, brothers of the bride; Seymour Berger, cousin of the groom; Morty Hirsch, S. Nemeroff and Mark Lax. Standards of white gladioli, palms, and tall candelabra decorated the synagogue. Organ music was played. The reception was held in the synagogue hall which was decorated with white lilacs and palms, and the tables were arranged with pink roses and white lilac tips. Mrs. Scopp was in a midnight-blue lace gown, and a flowered hat of blue hyacinths. Her corsage was of Joanna Hill roses. Mrs. Sacks wore a gown of toast-coloured net over taffeta, appliqued with sprays of hand-made Alencon lace, outlined in iridescent paillettes; also a small hat of Alencon lace embroidered in iridescent paillettes and pearl beading; and had a corsage of green orchids. Mrs. K. Koldofsky, grandmother of the groom, wore a rosewood-coloured crepe and lace gown, and a hat of cocoa-coloured lace over satin. Her corsage was of Talisman roses. For the wedding trip to Virginia Beach, Virginia, the bride travelled in a beige wool suit, with a brown velvet cloche hat, and tan snakeskin accessories. Her corsage was of white orchids. The couple will reside on Stuart Avenue. The groom is at present completing his studies in chartered accountancy at McGill University.

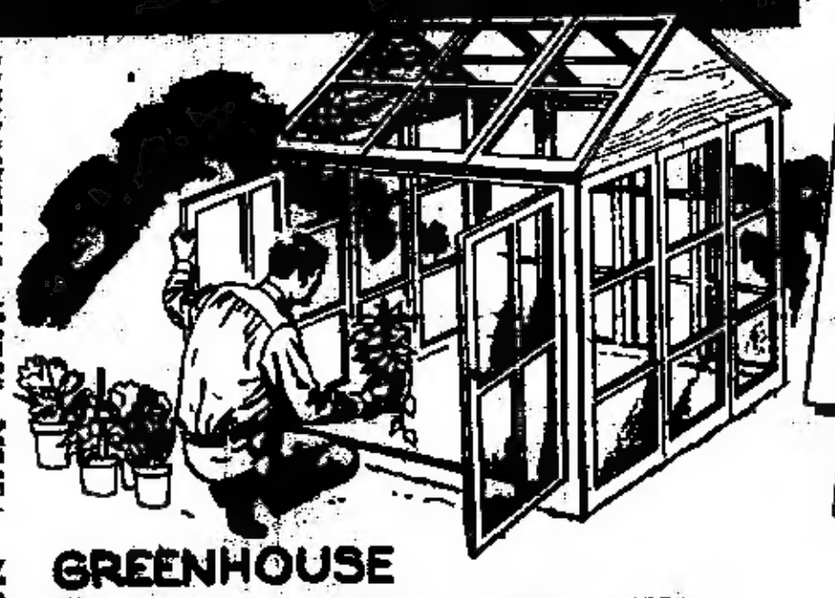
AROUND THE HOME



The old saying that there is nothing new under the sun might be refuted, for new ideas are constantly encountered during the course of a year. That man had something a little different from the ordinary run of things who formed his storm windows into a very serviceable green house. Having built a light framework of two by fours to support the weight, and using angle irons for joints, he placed eight storm windows in an upright position for sides and ends. The top was constructed with the small windows from the verandah.

One of the end windows served as a door. A centre window on the top was on hinges to permit the necessary ventilation. Two benches gave plenty of room for seed flats. When the garden was planted the windows were taken down, given a coat of fresh paint and stored until autumn.

It is only a step from the cradle to the bookcase. At least it seemed that way in a home I visited where I noted how small pieces of wood had been picked up from time to time, given a dressing, then turned into a magazine rack and a doll's cradle.

CONVENIENT TABLE

Tables are always in order, and easily constructed by the craftsman who is handy with tools. I was quite taken with one I came across recently. This man had gathered up broken billiard cues at his club, then cut them to the required length for table legs, small ends up. Pieces of plywood served as top and shelves, the edges being nicely sandpapered smooth. The holes to receive the legs were of varying sizes so that each one was tight in place. Glue was used for additional strength. The top and shelves were of ¾" B.C. plywood. The table was given a ground coat and then enamelled.

SERVICEABLE STOOLS

We sometimes admire good things and miss the obvious. That was about you saw in a neighbor's home and easily be constructed without too much trouble. After looking such a stool it was apparent that folding all pipes they could be bent to almost any desired shape. On the other hand, to do away with bending, it would be possible to use elbow joints and thus get the right angles. The seats on which the pipes were bent were made from pieces of discarded chairs, and a piece of [illegible] The top could be covered with a cloth seat, if used on patio chairs, or padded before the covering is put on. Saichel And Uncle Pincus

BY MARTIN S. DWORKIN

Conscious that he had gained the advantage, Hiram masterfully increased his adversaries' disequilibrium by remaining momentarily silent. Dutifully swallowing a few mouthfuls, he effectively disarmed his father's directive, poised for an instant to survey the military situation, and then launched his cavalry to reconnoitre and make contact with the enemy.

"You know, we've been learning all about heredity in school." The table affected unconcern, but the sally could be trusted to have effected its mission. "My teacher, Mr. Staple, says that you can tell whether the mother or father is stronger by which one of them the children take after."

Now, Uncle Pincus believed with all his heart that saichel is the most powerful force in the world. And yet he knew just as certainly—(for it was this very saichel that told him)—that no man is ever wiser than his children. For one thing, they never think so—except, occasionally, when it is too late. For another, they simply outlive parental wisdom of all kinds: see how full the world is of fools who have survived the pitfalls and errors of which their elders had so wisely warned! In the case of Hiram, it was less a matter of wisdom, and more one of being able to cope with often overwhelming absurdity. The terrible, unavoidable truth was, however, that absurdity is ever invincible against whatever reason and sanity can bring to bear; for these latter can merely predict, at best, and it is in the nature of the absurd to be unpredictable.

And so, Uncle Pincus sat before Hiram's onslaught, his mouth grotesquely open, utterly confounded by this new insanity, but with no way of showing anyone—including himself—that such it was: foolishness, and no more. Aunt Rose had come in from the kitchen; but even she stopped and waited, a huge chalah in her hands. The table company were silent; the room seemed charged with soundlessness; time itself had halted its advance to permit Uncle Pincus to find his breath again. But it was only Max, so splendidly at ease with the world, who could break the silence.

"Just what are you selling now?" he demanded, his eyebrows lifted just a little, for effect. "This guy Staple must be some character!" He turned to Uncle Pincus. "You know, maybe it isn't Staple at all. No teacher could be such a dope. Every time my mishnick brother here comes up with a new idea he blames it on Staple." Then, because the smirk of superior knowledge on Hiram's face was still there, "Look I took biology too, don't forget, and we never learned any rot like that."

Uncle Pincus was thankful for the respite given him by his eldest—as well as for the actual counter-offensive that had been started. He was made very uncomfortable, however, by the motionless presence of his wife, looming behind him, the chalah in her hands, like some great conscience, omnipresent and unyielding in its demands.

"Nu Rosie, do we get any more chalah, or not?" he asked, without looking at her, but showing as much mere annoyance as he could muster.

Aunt Rose did move forward, and began to slice the chalah on the big plate with quick, sure slashes of the bread-knife. It was plain, however—and painfully so to Uncle Pincus—that she had been much affected by what Hiram had said. In fact, the implications of his younger son's essay into genetics were just now becoming apparent to Uncle Pincus. He wished with all his heart that his wife would finish what she was doing, and return to her kitchen.

Hiram was not one to be easily put off by peremptory challenges—even from his older brother, nor by any frigidity in the initial reception of his expression. "It's in the book, too," he said, scornfully. "Some things in the parents are dominant—that's stronger—and some aren't. That's all there is to it." You see, this is the way the world is, Hiram was saying, and there was nothing his brother or his father could do about it. Certainly there was no denying the fact that all the children 'took after' Aunt Rose. To explain that away would require something superior to his biology—and not mere scorn.

Various aspects of his married life—including incidents long forgotten—were now obtruding them-

CLASS IN COOKERY

LEMON CHEESE PIE

For the spiced crumb crust: Combine one and one quarter cups crushed graham wafers (about sixteen) with two tablespoons brown sugar, one-quarter teaspoon cinnamon; and one-third cup butter. Mix thoroughly and pat crumbs firmly on bottom and sides of a buttered nine-inch pie-plate. Bake for about six minutes, or until lightly browned in a hot, 400-degree oven. For the lemon cheese filling: Combine one package of lemon pie filling-mix, with one beaten egg, one and three-quarters cups water, one-half cup sugar, and eight teaspoons of salt. Stir well, cooking over moderate heat, until mixture boils or thickens. Continuing to stir, mash in one-half pound cream cheese. Beat with rotary beater or mixer until well-blended, pour into baked crust, and chill until firm. For the fresh strawberry topping: Soften one and one-half teaspoons unflavoured gelatin in two tablespoons cold water. Prepare two and one-half cups fresh strawberries. Slice one cup, and cook with one-half cup sugar and one-quarter-cup water, for five minutes. Strain. Immediately stir in gelatin, add whole berries, and chill until slightly thickened. Spread over filling; and chill until set.

SAICHEL AND UNCLE PINCUS

selves upon Uncle Pincus' consciousness. At first, he was confronted by the outlandish thought that he was some kind of usurper; that the rightful ruler of this domestic policy was held in bondage in the kitchen, contrary to the sacred discoveries of science. Then, he was almost completely unnerved by the thought that Hiram's pronouncement—which was also in the book—would hold necessarily, despite any lack of awareness on the part of those involved. The fact of the children's features was inescapable; maybe there was some mitigating reason for this which could be discovered later. But who was then—and always had been—head of the house? Could it be that he had really been led around by the nose, that by some mysterious, omnipotent wile his saichel—his very soul—had been betrayed? Uncle Pincus squirmed inside himself, and grimaced weakly at his plate.

Jeanie was in a turmoil almost as deep and seemingly irresolvable. For if what her brother said was true, her lack of beauty was something supernal, and not to be denied. She was to be cheated in her life, not by weakness, but by strength. Instead of being further depressed, however, she soon felt a curious elation—a certain pure womanly feeling—rising to transmute her defeat into a kind of triumph. For the first time in her life, she looked upon her father condescendingly, as upon one really inferior, but who had to be given the trappings, the mere panoply of pre-eminence. And she was already enough the heroine of her own romance to recognise the momentous nature of this new relation of herself to her father.

What had been before only an unconscious contempt for masculinity and its absurd presumptions now unabashedly uncased its colours in her mind, and, moreover, shone from her face, as yet untrained in that dissimulation that is woman's stoutest shield and sharpest sword. Nor was Uncle Pincus unaware that his child had somehow gone, leaving a wordly changeling in her place. A glance into her eyes, and he became at once an aged patriarch looking upon the now-grown offshoot of his distant youth, and a little boy caught in the crime of his puerility by the mother's unblinking eye.

A welcome caesura was provided by the ringing of the doorbell. It was Gumbiner, carrying a large plate, on which was something carefully wrapped in a clean white cloth. "Still eating?" he asked. "Hello, hello, how is everybody? Nu Pincus, if you're so unhappy to see me I'll go home right away—after I give this cake to Rosie." He stepped into the kitchen, followed by Jeanie, who immediately took up a large towel and began to dry the dishes stacked up next to the sink. Aunt Rose looked up at Gumbiner with a smile, which suddenly changed to an expression of utter horror as she looked past him to where Jeanie leaned against the wash-tub, the towel and a plate in her hands.

"Jeanie!" she shrieked, "what are you doing?" Thrusting her visitor violently aside, she rushed at her surprised daughter and wrenched the towel away. "A milchige towel yet! What's wrong with you? You'll make the whole house trief in a minute! Can't you see the blue border?" So that Jeanie could no longer be mistaken, she waved the offending cloth an inch from her eyes.

Thus rudely torn from her private world, Jeanie recovered with a speed gained from many encounters. "It's a clean one. I took it from the closet just before."

"It's just a matter of ritual, anyway," put in Gumbiner, tightly holding the plate he had brought, pressing it high against his chest as if to protect it from destruction by Aunt Rose's holocaust. "Just call a blue towel milchige for this time, until it goes to the laundry."

Aunt Rose snorted fiercely. "Aha! You and my husband! The stadt where you both are rabbonim hasn't been built yet!"

Gumbiner smiled, thinking of Socrates' ideal city, that is built only in heaven and cannot exist on earth except by the wildest stretch of chance. The philosopher, however, must live according to its laws, wherever he may be, and Gumbiner looked at Aunt Rose with a kindly twinkle in his eye, and proferred the cake. "Schweig," he said, with a smile, "Here's a honey-cake Clara made for you. Sweets to the sweet."

SAYS NAZI

in its work in the field of textiles and the clothing retail trade. Numerous Costa Rican workers with whom I had the opportunity of speaking, assured me that Jewish imports from the United States and the merchandising methods which were used, had made accessible to them products which would otherwise not have been available.

"The trade which Jewish merchants had with the U.S. runs into many millions of dollars every year and is an asset of the greatest importance in the commercial development of the country. I am quite certain that given the opportunity they will participate even more actively in its development, and that they will come to be recognized even by those who are still doubtful, as a factor of importance in the progress of the country.

"I came away from this visit convinced that democracy has deep roots in Costa Rica and that the people will never tolerate any attempt to introduce Nazi-like prejudices, which they recognize to be an affront to their own traditions as well as a danger to minorities. A representative of the government, who accompanied me to the steps of the plane on which I left, reiterated the assurance that every possible step would be taken to protect the rights of Jewish Costa Ricans, and he expressed the hope that it would not be long before I would visit in the country again."

Aunt Rose was even more the philosopher, and knew when an argument was over. She took the cake, her own eyes beginning to twinkle, and carefully set it down on a shelf below a tall cupboard.

The exchange in the kitchen strangely revitalized Uncle Pincus in the dining-room. Had he stopped to reflect at this moment, he would have understood that he had simply been reassured by the commonplace: that his wife's continuing primacy among her rightful concerns located his own respective primacy in those matters of more cosmic significance. Milchigs and fleischigs were important, to be sure; but their significance was to be found distinctly in the realm of woman's affairs, in the province of the house-wife who presides over the home so that a man is left untrammeled for those weightier matters with which he must contend.

"Nu, Gumbiner," he said, still expanding, "you came just in time. My son has picked up some new naharischkeit in school. Maybe a philosophe like you can understand it."

Gumbiner walked slowly into the dining-room from the kitchen, a smile on his face. What Pincus really means, he thought, is that it takes a nahr to understand naharischkeit. It should be so simple! The truth is that that very little foolishness appears without some clothing of sense—even if this be but a suit of the emperor's new clothes. The wisest men are all too often taken in themselves, but this was because anyone can become a fool at any moment: for all his wisdom, the wise man is yet a man. He leaned against a huge buffet that dominated one side of the room, and regarded Uncle Pincus with affection.

"What do you think?" Uncle Pincus went on. "My high school chochem here is saying that if children look like their mother, it means that the father is no good."

"Not so good!" Hiram almost shouted, "I never said that!" He turned towards Gumbiner. "The children inherit what they look like from the one whose genes are stronger. That's all." In spite of his many campaigns, Hiram was not yet to adjust with sufficient rapidity to sudden changes in the adult terrain — especially when that terrain was dramatically altered by the looming presence of an audience. He knew Uncle Pincus's power on the offensive, and felt a sinking inside —even though he could tell from the expression on Gumbiner's face that the latter was less convinced by the content of anything his father said than he was intrigued by his performance.

"Nu, Gumbiner, nasoi gelt der welt. I live a whole life, and now my 'genes' are no good."

"I didn't say that!" Hiram wailed, knowing that already all was lost: his father had decided which enemy would be the easiest to annihilate, and had promptly invented him. Hiram was completely disarmed. The best he could do would be to defend the flimsy fortress Uncle Pincus had erected for him—until another blast of scornful irrelevance melted even that away.

Gumbiner could tell that the controversy, whatever its intensity before, had passed its climax. The atmosphere was that of a cylinder from which most of the compressed steam had escaped. Max was at the telephone in the foyer, joking with someone about a softball game on Sunday. Jeanie and Aunt Rose were chattering in the kitchen. Pincus was obviously at ease, and in the course of mellowing even further. Only Hiram was still concerned, and he had passed from desperation to resentful resignation.

"Well, Hiram," he said, kindly, "you are partly right. But it's not the whole story." Uncle Pincus flung his head, in arrogant punctuation of what his friend had said. "Some things you inherit from one parent, some from another," Gumbiner went on. "You look like your mother; nu. But maybe you think and behave like your father?"

Aha! thought Uncle Pincus, saichel is the strongest in the end. If there are any brains in the family, anyone with half a head of his own could tell where they came from.

"But it's not like that in the book," Hiram objected, "Mr. Staple . . ."

"A ruchus' vai zu Mr. Staple—him and his books together!" said Uncle Pincus, with finality. "What does he know about LIFE! Do you think that only from books you learn everything?" He tapped his cheat over the heart and then his forehead with a stubby forefinger. "The most important thing you'll never learn in school," he said, knowingly. "Saichel doesn't come out of a book." Gumbiner smiled. "Nu, Pincus, he gets his saichel from you. You should be happy. Mazeltov."

"From me only" Uncle Pincus's eyes were fiery and proud. "Do you think you get saichel for nothing? Does he have it already?" He snorted. "A nachtige tag! It should happen so easy! Saichel you don't get from 'genes'. For saichel you have to bleed and suffer! You have to know LIFE before you have saichel!" With this, he clapped his hands palms downward on the table. Then, after a brief, charged moment, he began to elaborately roll back part of the tablecloth. Reaching in his pocket, he took out the pack of cards he had put there before supper. "Come, Gumbiner, a couple of hands. Hiram, go do your homework in the bedroom."
